After following the well written directions and reaching the run site it seemed like a perfect afternoon for a run. Final preparations were under way for the day's proceedings. Immediately noticeable was an iron pot of enormous size. It could easily have been as a hot tub The pot was in fact signaling what was on the menu...curry, lovely curry!

The group was called to assembly and Martin did the honors of telling the usual lies such as, "there are no hills, just one small incline". He also advised that we could expect thigh-high water on the run. Some hashers expressed concern about getting their balls wet; they soon got over it though. After explaining, for the virgins' benefit, what a circle was, what an X was and the exact percentage of types of paper and flour used to set the run, it was on on!

As seems to be customary we were pointed in the wrong direction by the hares. After a brief moment of confusion it was down into the river to get our feet wet early o'clock. After trekking along some dry river bed we climbed up onto the road. The road stage continued for sometime which did not go well with a few hashers. Whispers on the wind could be heard saying, " I doh come on a Saturday hash to run on road steups!". Soon enough we were ascending one of those "small inclines". The sounds of a large number of dogs could be heard barking in the distance up the hill, oops sorry, incline. As I passed one of the indigenous folk I asked what all the commotion was up ahead with the dogs. He informed me, "It doh have no dogs up there". I responded with, "Then that is a pack ah cyat getting on so then", it seems there are comedians everywhere.

The next notable point was the steepest of the "small inclines" the pack was unsure if to go up and were marking Martin's movements. Martin then assured the pack that the correct trail is at the top. The pack spent some time trying to find the well hidden trail, but once found it was a steep descent into a field of "picker"! Quite a few hashers, both male and female, complained about getting prick! I will leave that right there. At this point I must say that the trail made short-cutting easy as it looped back onto the main path in close proximity to where it deviated and many hashers could not resist the temptation.

There were some well placed X's that helped keep the pack together and lots of stony dry riverbed. The ON IN was across the river from the parking lot and it was just a matter of climbing down, crossing the river and up the stairs to the start. All in all, It was a good run and time to begin the intense recovery period!!

The air up in Maracas Valley seemed to make everyone extra hungry as the food finished in record time. Hashers could be seen eating plain bread. I even saw a woman moving with a bag of bun-up hops bread! I was beginning to wonder why the down downs was taking so long to begin only to find out that a group of hashers got lost and the rescue party was out scouring the village for them. Some of these were experienced hashers like Reed, Kemba, Julian and Sabah. After the lost bunch was rescued the down downs could begin.

The head hare, Ronald, was made to kneel before the hash master as punishment for being unprepared. There seemed to be more virgins than experienced hashers. As a result, this part of the proceedings took up quite a bit of time. The hash master then called on a few members of the lost party to punish them. Their crime was not getting lost but using one hasher's GPS to find their way back to the start. The hash master made it clear that this was not acceptable. As if this was not bad enough, one hasher paid a taxi $40 to drop her back to the run site!!!

There were three poofter nominees:

- Cory - who ran from his punishment for an infringement at the Chaguaramas run
- Jessie - who was seen to be falling down all the time. He even lead other hashers through the picker. Calamity Jessie he was branded!
- Sabah - who was the last to be retrieved from the bush after getting lost was said to have found love on the trail

It didn't take long for the crowd to select a tie for the poofter which went to Cory and Sabah. Cory could run but not hide and we may never know what happened in the bush with Sabah and the mystery love interest. After much blocking and pseudo-sensual activities they both had on their shirts and chose to wear their beer. The Savannah bar was the next stop!

A great time was had by all and run 860 was well attended. Next stop Moruga! On On!!!

HM's Hability

Poor HM!;...had to accept several rebuffs on behalf of the hares for there not being enough food after the hash run. The other fact that quite a few hashers got 'misplaced' on the hash trail only prolonged the agony of the famished and forlorn. One young female hasher even used the term 'starving to death'. She bided me "Adios - I going to look fuh sometin' to eat." The 'drinking club', for a time, became the 'eating club'. Such is the way of the hash sometimes. We need to constantly recognize the reason we show up on a Saturday evening. I'm not afraid that we'll get it just right, hasher by hasher.

Under the circumstances, I found the run to be a very good one, which I thoroughly enjoyed, quite frankly. The run gave way to some beautiful scenery up within the Maracas valley. Great work by Tall & Dark at the front of the pack – though I cannot be so generous for what took place at the back of the run! Though not placing any judgment, this shows the importance of hares properly sweeping their hash trail.

We were graced by a large contingent of ‘fitness fanatics’, from a fitness group. They enjoyed themselves and promised to be back. They made up the bulk of the virgins, and this segment took a bit of time; Shows the tremendous interest in the hash of late.

Whoever remained after the down-downs – ‘through and through hashers’ enjoyed the music and heartily partook of the free beer on offer – the best part of the hash without a doubt! A handful of die-hards still made it to the On-On-On bar with one of the hares in attendance.

Altogether a memorable Saturday hash evening – great site, good run and nice lime.

Thanks again to everyone.

We did well at this hash with proper disposal and collection of our litter. There still remains lots of room for improvement. With your assistance, let’s keep up the good work!
