Another newbie Trash writer... oh well...here goes nothing. This hash run was an easy drive for me as it was set a stone throw away from my backyard. Lush green tropical rain forest and rainy season combined, gives a home not only for the birds, butterflies and other forest animal; but only makes you wonder if the snakes would come out to play! Alta Vista our hash site perched just on the left after Asa Wright nature centre took us all through the scenic Arima valley of the Northern Range. Drivers along this side were greeted by windy roads. Did I mention these windy roads run alongside miles and miles of cliff and precipice?? Yes, but don't be afraid of driving off the precipice, just ensure to drive under 50 and let your beer wear off before you leave the site for home. Nevertheless, the rainforest is always breath taking. The stretch of bamboo that arches the road makes you feel like you are on a royal drive. The sights of Poui and other types of trees are sprinkled across the mountains and they go on and on till the eyes cannot see. Not to mention the change in temperature of hotness to coolness. Hashing in a rainforest has perks. After everyone had arrived and parked on the very narrow road it was time to gather for the usual start of the hash with HM welcoming everyone and handing over to the Hare for further instructions. There was some hype about who would get ah snake bite and then the ON ON was given. For a minute everyone seemed lost, no one had found the start-up and this caused people to be liming on the top road. After the lime broke up the trail was finally found taking us downhill into the lush bushes. This run could not have hit the mud, mush of leaves and mud water any faster, but say wah! Don't we all just live for those hash moments where we stomp into slushy, muddy, decomposing forest matter?! The run went on and on through a few X's which then led to some minor hills. These minor hills can be defined as the hills that are not so steep, that you can actually run up the entire thing and then down and back up another without feeling 'burn'. Yes even I was like yesss feel the burn! Okay so the run was going really great. A few 'hash pushers' (people who run past you really fast and wild pushing you out of the way), more mud and slush, some very slippery rocks later we finally met our match. The climax of this Alta Vista hash. So there it was! One of those Major hills... Major hills can be defined as one of those hills that goes on and on and on and on, times 100, until you keep looking up into the sky trying to calculate the tree height and the angle of light permeating them to figure out... when the hell would we reach the top and be put out of such misery. I must admit, I felt a little nauseous. I felt like my lunch which I had eaten more than three hours before hash wanted to come up. But I kept it down because am a trooper! (and because I didn't want Ash, Devon or Marita to see and later at down down nominate me for POOFTA). Alas, I did not feel too bad because behind me I heard a few moans and groans about this monster hill, as well as observed other people slowing down but still fighting to reach the top. Ten million years later (or what if felt like) we reached the top! The RUN IN!

And run in we did. Hash was okay, ran back to base and people were still in the pool. Oh yea did I mention entry fee was $20? I didn't even get a free Coca Cola or Lucozade! ON ON till next hash....

HM's Histrionics

We always look forward to hashes up along the Bye-Pass Road, Arima; enjoying the serenity & beauty of the northern range on the drive is something to behold – some added value for your Saturday evening sacrifice. Our run site was a rustic eco-lodge, somewhat nestled off a ridge. A great turnout for this run; which saw the front runners completing it in 50 minutes. Short & sweet was the mantra of these seven hares! That's how it goes sometimes.

The lime was great, and the food was well patronized. Thanks to the hares for organizing a lovely spot for us all...Definitely someplace to return to in short time. On On Segregate your waste at the hash! Remember Disassemble, Crush & Dispose responsibly. We're all in this together!
