Football was in the air, the noise, betting options as to who will win or lose, lime being planned and off course the drinks.....yes the beers. It was a toss-up as to the two credible options....Hash or football and of course, HASH had the say and rightfully so as I am guilty of not attending the last couple of months and now they catch me to write the dam trash. I know for a fact that the hares would have put out a lot of time and efforts into their run, a really proud bunch, about three attractive female hares and two good for nothing of the male species kind, one short and the other heavy.

The journey to south is always a toss-up, traffic or no traffic and what time should I leave but luckily for the football, little or no traffic so the drive was almost traffic free with a pretty nice ambience from the highway into Seecharan trace where the run site was. A well manicured area with all the basic amenities that we are not accustomed to and what the hell? The beer van was there and all set up already and it was only 3pm. But I understood why as I came out of my vehicle and proceeded to the covered area, there were the hares lulling off watching the football game except for the hare who still holds the position of traffic police and chief photo take out. He was on duty and directed me into the parking area. As the time drew closer to the start, there were no sign of the HM.....where the hell is the HM? A no show but we heard that he was in POS to watching the football game and he delegated the duties to a past HM kind. It was not the usual big crowd that I am accustomed to, I guess it was because of the football but say what, the hash will go on.

The hash was call to order and the past HM did the briefing and handed over to the hares and well, they were dressed in Brazil shirts, if they could have only see the future then it would have been their regular big brand name wear. The traffic police hare did the briefing during which he got two phone calls....at that time I knew that he was a potential Poofter. We were off to the run, the traditional slow start guessing which way it was and finally after approximately five minutes, we found the on on. The trail was quite easy, not too much bush and nice undulating land until we reach the tiny village where the locals were wondering what the hell going on with these crazy people. The beer stop was in sight but it was only about 30 minutes into the run so I was a bit confused, is this a 40 minutes run? Well, it was not, a long trail of running on some decent wide trails up and down and on and on until we came to a check that seems to be far from the run site but we continued. It was a bit puzzling as we could not find paper and kept looking until we realized that it was one of the longest back check that I ever experienced. Way back pass two checks and it was on a left turn where the on on was. Something had gone wrong on the trail, passing two checks the had to come all the way back?. It was a pretty long on on again until we came to the ON ON IN....and a good feeling as it was one hour and a half out there and at least twenty minutes running back and forth while the dam football going on.

The down down was pretty clever as the HM who did not show up earlier was present to do his normal gig. Things turned on him after he announced all the potential poofers, the past HM who had his own microphone was all set to nominate the HM for his preference towards watching football and not being present at the start and made matters worse, he did not run. So it was the HM who and rightly so got the Poofter along with the traffic police hare who took two phone calls while doing the brief at the start. It was great fun indeed having left the run site at 10pm that night.
